PASSAGE 1:

1 Fingerprinting, as a method of identifying people, is becoming obsolete, and newer, more effective methods of identification are taking its place. These methods are called biometric identification.

2 Vein pattern is one form of biometric identification. This method requires the person to make a fist with his or her hand. Then, using a special light, the unique pattern of blood veins on the back of his or her hand is analyzed.

3 Another way to identify people is through body odor. Chemicals called “volatiles” make up each person’s unique human smell. Body odor can be taken from a part of the hand and changed into a model and this can be used to identify the person.

4 Personal signatures are also used for biometric identification. The name of this method is misleading, though, as it is not the completed signature that identifies the person, but the act of signing. This method analyzes the way the pen is held, the amount of time it takes to complete the signature, the amount of pressure on the pen, and how many times the pen is lifted from the paper.

1 For a long time, Zaha Hadid was known as ‘the paper architect’, someone whose grand designs never left the page to become real buildings. But in recent years her buildings have sprouted up like mushrooms all over the world: the Guangzhou Opera House in China, a car factory in Germany, a contemporary art museum in Rome, a transport museum in Scotland, and the Aquatics Centre for the 2012 Olympics in London.

2 Hadid is now one of the most sought after architects of our age. She is also one of the few women to have made it in a profession still dominated by men. In Britain, where Hadid lives (she was born in Iraq in 1950), less than 15% of practicing architects are women. A lot more than that enter the profession, but either because of difficulty in getting recognized or because of the deep conservatism surrounding most British architecture, over half of them leave. But being “a woman in a man’s world” seems to have given Hadid extra strength. At times she felt she was banging her head against a wall trying to get her designs accepted, but she persevered. Famous for her fierce independence, one of her former tutors called her ‘a planet in her own orbit’.

3 Pinning down her individual style is difficult. Certainly she has been influenced by the modern trend in architecture that likes to play with the traditional shape of buildings and fragment them, creating unpredictable angles and surfaces. Working in this way, she and her fellow architects have produced various rather off the wall spaceship-like structures that seem to defy the normal laws of engineering, but which have intrigued and excited the public.

PASSAGE 3:

1 There is no more welcome sight on beaches all over the world than a lifeguard. You can spot lifeguards a mile off because they wear highly conspicuous red-and-yellow uniforms, and somehow they manage to look better than the rest of us too.

2 “Last year, we only had to make five rescues,” says head lifeguard Rod Terry, 22. “Another year, we helped 29 people in the space of three hours. You never know what you’re going to be called upon to do, which is why you need lifeguards who can cope with any situation.” You’d think, of course, they perform some public heroics, but Rod refuses such suggestions.

3 “As far as we’re concerned, we’d rather stop someone getting into trouble than have to get them out of it.” One of the lifeguards in Rod’s team is 24-year-old Becky Surridge. She says, “One minute you can find yourself dealing with minor cuts, and the next with a situation where one group of people on the beach is annoying another group. You have to handle things sensitively too. Even if they do talk tough, we lifeguards have no legal authority with which to back up their words.” “We can only advise,” adds Rod. “If someone wants to ignore a red flag, they’re free to do so.” A red flag is what the lifeguards put out when the wind gets stronger and the sea’s too rough for swimming. Exactly when that moment is reached is something that Rod alone decides. A lifeguard since the age of 14, first as a volunteer, he’s now a paid member of the town council’s leisure services department. ‘You take into account a variety of things: you listen to the weather reports and forecasts, and you assess the strength of the wind.’ Other factors to be considered, depending on location, of course, are the dangers that may be lurking in the water.

4 The majority of swimmers take notice of a red flag, but there are always those who don’t, and long before they start really getting into trouble, lifeguards will be on their way out to them, bringing them to the safety of the beach. They also help swimmers suffering from cramp brought on by swimming too soon after a meal, or fatigue caused by swimming out too far.

5 At any one time, there are eight lifeguards on duty, either scanning the waves or patrolling the beach. The team works five days a week, and constantly has to rotate tasks as this facilitates maximum degrees of attention. The other thing that keeps the lifeguards alert is the fact that they all get on well together. ‘It’s not as if we’re all sitting there in silence,’ says Lisa. ‘We’re always talking to each other, either in person or down the two-way radio.’

6 In fact, each summer season is something of an old friend’s reunion; this is the seventh year Pete has worked here, while it’s the fifth for Rebecca. In wintertime, they go off round the world – Pete’s been surfing in Mexico, and Rebecca’s just back from Bali, Hawaii, and New Zealand. It’s a case of not yet wanting to give up their seasonal, sunlit round of beaches. ‘There’s plenty of time for a proper job later,’ says Rebecca.
